Dragonfly Capital has passed on investing in Eclipse as sexual harassment allegations against its CEO, Neel Somani, have come to light.

In a May 10 X post, Haseeb Qureshi, managing partner of crypto VC firm Dragonfly Capital, said that his firm declined to invest in Eclipse while completing due diligence on the L2 solution.

During the process, Dragonfly discovered a history of sexual harassment surrounding Eclipse's founder, Neel Somani.

Soman said that he would leave his role as Eclipse's "public face" since it would be unfair to the team and the L2 solution "to have this situation weighing on their reputations," adding:

"I'll be temporarily reducing my role as a public face for Eclipse. The senior leaders at Eclipse are well equipped to take on these responsibilities and this will allow these conversations to unfold and the truth to emerge about these allegations."

In a separate statement, Eclipse noted that the firm "remains committed to maintaining the highest personal and professional standards, including gender equality and fair treatment." The company will also carefully monitor the matter and provide details regarding the other senior Eclipse members who are leading Eclipse.

Eclipse co-founder Sam Thapaliya stated that his company is "committed to upholding the highest standards of integrity and accountability" throughout its operations.
